Disputed Questions on Virtue, Articles 1-2 (trans. Hause and Murphy):

1. What is the structure of the various parts of Aquinas's discussion in article 1? (What is the question in dispute? How many preliminary arguments are there for each side of the question? Etc.) You don't need to summarize the details of the various arguments, just identify the parts of the question as a whole—saying what each part contributes to the whole.
2. What does Aquinas say all virtues share in common (in the "reply" section of article 1)? What does this tell us about the nature of virtue in general?
3. What are three different types of power Aquinas distinguishes? How is this three-fold distinction relevant to the nature of virtues? (Be sure to mention Aquinas's examples in your answer.)
4. Aquinas says that we need the virtuous habits for three reasons. What are they?
5. What is the question in dispute in article 2? (Be sure to state Augustine's definition of virtue in your answer.) Why do you think Aquinas is addressing this issue?
6. Does Aquinas agree with Augustine's definition (in the "reply" section of article 2)? Be careful how you answer this. Can you say 'yes' or 'no' without qualification? Why or why not?
7. How exactly does Aquinas's account of virtue fit with Augustine's? Does it differ in any way? If so, how?

Summa Theologiae 1-2, Questions 61-62 (trans. Freddoso):

8. What is the question in dispute in article 1 of question 61? What is Aquinas's answer? And how does the distinction he draws between perfect and imperfect virtue function in that answer?
9. In article 2, Aquinas argues that there are four cardinal virtues. What are these virtues and what are his motivations for postulating them? (Be sure to explain both of the ways he arrives at them.)
10. In article 3, Aquinas says that the four cardinal virtues can be considered in two ways. What are they, and what is the point of considering them in these different ways?
11. In article 4, Aquinas describes how different people have understood the cardinal virtues. Why do you think he's doing this?
12. Explain the four-fold division of the cardinal virtues in article 5. Does this bring out anything interesting we haven't seen so far? If so, what?
13. In question 62, Aquinas turns to the theological virtues. In article 1 of this question, he draws a distinction between two types of happiness. What is it, and how is it relevant to answer the question of whether there are any theological virtues?
14. In article 2, Aquinas asks about the relationship between the theological virtues and the moral (or cardinal) virtues. Why does he think they are distinct?

15. What does Aquinas say in article 3 about faith, hope, and love? Why do we need all three? What are their subjects and how are they related to one another?

16. What is the question in dispute in article 4? What is Aquinas's answer?
